Social Security Questions and Answers

Q. My sister was seriously injured in a house fire. The doctor says she'll be in the hospital for several months and won't be able to work again for a year or longer. If she qualifies for disability benefits, will they start right away?

A. No. There's a 5-month waiting period for social security disability benefits. Monthly payments start with the 6th month of disability and continue as long as the person is disabled. Also, when a person has been eligible for disability benefits for 2 consecutive years, he or she will have Medicare protection.

Q. I haven't decided exactly when I'm going to stop work, so I haven't applied for social security retirement payments yet. A friend told me I should apply now, though, because there's a limit on back benefits. Is this true?

A. Before 1978, a person could elect to receive benefits for up to 12 months before the month of application if all requirements were met during that period. Now, back benefits generally are not payable if they would result in permanent benefit reduction. For more information, call any social security office.

Q. I just got a divorce. I've decided to go back to using my maiden name. Should I notify social security of the name change?

A. Whenever you change your name - whether because of marriage, divorce, or other reasons - you should notify social security, especially if you work in a job covered by social security. Along with the change-of-name request, you will have to show proof of your identity under both your old name and your new name. The people at any social security office can tell you what documents can be used as proof of identity.

Q. My husband died last month. If I get widows benefits now, will this affect my own retirement benefit when I reach 65?

A. If you are entitled to retirement benefits on your own work record and you receive reduced widow benefits before 62, your own retirement payment at 65 also will be reduced.

Q. My wife's doctor has admitted her to a psychiatric hospital for treatment of severe mental depression. Will our Medicare insurance pay for her care?

A. Medicare hospital insurance can help pay for no more than 190 days of care in a participating psychiatric hospital in a patient's lifetime. Once a person has used these 190 days, hospital insurance cannot pay for any more care in a psychiatric hospital, even if some or all of the person's reserve days are left. There is a special rule that applies if a person is in a participating psychiatric hospital at the time his or her hospital insurance starts. For more information, contact any social security office.

It's a fact that in an effort to help remedy that, J. Hugh Liedtke, Chairman and Chief Executive Officer of Pennzoil has pledged that his company will use any additional net income it receives from oil decontrol to look for more domestic oil and gas.

JOBS FOR WOMEN

Qualified young women have an opportunity to earn money while training for a career in such fields as accounting, computer operation, legal reporting, photo journalism, radio and television information, personnel administration, illustration, electronics, radio repair, music and much more.

All this is available in the United States Marine Corps, where women serve on an interchangeable basis with men in noncombat occupations. Women Marines are partners and share in the Marine Corps traditions of pride, leadership and service to their country.

Some women Marines go to formal school for skills training. Others receive on-the-job training. Whatever specialty a woman Marine develops, she will be a professional in that field. It is an investment in her future, in or out of the Corps. Through the Veterans' Educational Assistance program, the Marines will help her save toward her own future education as well.

A Marine's salary goes a long way because so many basic needs are provided: food, housing, allowance for upkeep of uniform, dental and medical care.

She earns 30 days' paid vacation a year and can retire after 20 years at approximately half pay, while still young enough for a second career.

Good News For Middle-Aged Eyes

One of the most common eye problems—presbyopia—can now be easily corrected.

Presbyopia simply means "old eyes." If you're over 40, there's a good chance your eye lens are growing less and less elastic and supporting muscles less able to properly focus on close objects. The result is that when you try to read, all you see is a blur.

If an eye examination by an ophthalmologist, optometrist or optician indicates your problem is presbyopia, the solution is quite inexpensive. Nonprescription reading glasses, costing $10, or less, are, in many cases, identical to prescription glasses costing many times more. If you have no special eye problems, ask your eye doctor if non-prescription glasses could do the trick for you.

Reading glasses, like Vision Aid Magnifiers, the nation's most popular ready-to-wear glasses, come in a variety of lens strengths and frame styles.

Vision Aid Magnifiers, the only reading glasses manufactured in the United States, are optically ground and polished to meet the high quality standards established by the U.S. Food and Drug Administration, and various state imposed standards.

NON-PRESCRIPTION EYEGLASSES are often the simple solution to reading problems of people over 40.

Reading glasses are available over the counter in drug, variety and department stores. Pennsylvania Optical, producers of Vision Aid Magnifiers, advises that family members, and especially those over forty, follow an eye care program that includes regular eye examinations.

Besides being a great help in reading, non-prescription eyeglasses can aid hobbyists who work on miniature furniture or on stamp collections. For sewers, these magnifying lenses can help in threading a needle.

In buying non-prescription glasses, pick out a pair that fits comfortably and gives you good reading vision, plus a little range.

Cereal and bakery items say "Better If Used Before," and strained and junior foods, juices and Toddler Meals read "For Better Quality Use By Date Below." A date that looks like this: 03 OCT 80 is read like this: October 3, 1980.
